Caroline Wahl, born in 1995 in Mainz, grew up near Heidelberg. She studied German philology in Tübingen and German literature in Berlin, before working at several publishing houses. In 2023, her debut novel 22 Bahnen was published, for which she received awards such as the Ulla-Hahn Author's Prize and the Grimmelshausen Promotion Prize. It was also named the Favorite Book of the Independent Booksellers 2023. With her books Windstärke 17 and Die Assistentin, she achieved landmark success, holding top positions on the bestseller lists for months. Caroline Wahl lives in Kiel.

Heading south, chasing freedom without limits.

The self-discovery trip to Bali? Samara did not find anyone. The trendy agency in Berlin? As dull as any other job. Samara knows what she no longer wants but what she does want she is not quite sure of. Maybe a life where she does not feel like a stranger?

Now she has bright orange hair, a beautiful old car, and a new name wherever she goes. And she is aiming high, really high, up to the Swiss Alps, to St. Moritz. That is where a stunning man with ice blue eyes, whom she met in Berlin and cannot get out of her head, comes from. St. Moritz is full of beautiful, wealthy people, and in the middle of it all is Samara, who no longer goes by Samara, and who is not an imposter but a successful artist.

Then, suddenly, the handsome man reappears. And maybe the story is only just beginning.

Mareike Fallwickl was born in Hallein near Salzburg. She is a freelance author and lives near Salzburg. In 2018, Dunkelgrün fast schwarz was published, followed by Das Licht ist hier viel heller in 2019. Her bestseller Die Wut, die bleibt received acclaim from both critics and readers. The stage adaptation premiered at the Salzburg Festival in the summer of 2023. Mareike Fallwickl is committed to promoting literature, with a focus on female narrative voices.

This powerful book challenges our deeply held beliefs about friendship and romance, boldly painting the picture of a utopia we truly long for in our lives.

Luzia grows up in a community that serves as a sanctuary for a diverse group of people. Inside their house, queer and platonic forms of love, alongside co-parenting, are actively lived. Years later, as an adult and theater director, Luzia fights against patriarchal structures, determined to spark meaningful change. Meanwhile, her childhood friend Marle, now in her early forties, feels a strong desire to have a child and chooses an unconventional path - independent of traditional relationships with men.

But when a devastating storm suddenly hits, everything this chosen family has built over decades is threatened. What does it take for such a community to survive and endure in times like these?

Ulrike Sterblich, political scientist and author from Berlin (West), continues to live in her hometown where she also became known as hostess of the talk and literary event "Berlin Bunny Lectures". In 2012, her successful memoir Die halbe Stadt, die es nicht mehr gibt was published. In 2021, Ulrike Sterblich published her highly acclaimed debut, The German Girl. Her second novel Drifter was shortlisted for the German Book Prize in 2023.

Bärbel Krabbe works in the property management department of a real estate firm; her daughter Luzi has just finished her law degree and recently moved out. The year is 1999. The colleague in charge of IT is tasked with preventing the looming Millennium Bug - and stumbles upon serious irregularities in the process. While the situation at Bärbel's company escalates, Luzi loses herself in the world of conspiracy theories.

Modern fairy tales and myths, delusions, incompetence, and genuine criminal machinations tangle into a thicket where even our two otherwise pragmatic protagonists eventually lose their bearings. Almost.

Vibrant, clever, and wildly entertaining, Ulrike Sterblich tells the story of how people try to bring meaning and order to a chaotic world while work, daily routine, and transience shake them to the core. And how they fail at it - in the most highly productive way.

Edgar Selge, born in 1948, grew up in Herford, East Westphalia. In 1975, he completed his acting training at the Otto Falckenberg School in Munich. Prior to that, he studied philosophy and German language and literature in Munich and Dublin, as well as classical piano in Vienna. He is widely considered one of Germany's most prominent character actors and has been honored with numerous awards for his work. In 2021, he made his literary debut with Hast du uns endlich gefunden. The book spent weeks in the top ten of the bestseller list and was enthusiastically celebrated by both critics and readers. It was awarded the Literature Prize of the City of Fulda as well as the Bayern 2 Audience Award.

"It doesn't matter where we begin to practice trust: with ourselves or with others. We just have to start."

Jura Ryabinkin is sixteen years old when he starves to death during the Siege of Leningrad by the German Wehrmacht. He leaves behind a diary that the narrator of this novel reads over and over again, until he soon believes he knows the boy. Jura becomes a fictional character, just as the narrator does. Their encounter begins cautiously and grows closer as the story progresses. Between the two, an exchange unfolds about youth, dreams, literature, mothers, violence, strangeness, and closeness, and they reveal their most personal stories to one another.

Edgar Selge pays tribute to a young human being who was brutally murdered by the Nazis, bringing him to life for his readers. A moving read, a book of irrepressible literary imagination.

January 1990. The GDR ist finished. The borders are open. René, just twenty years old, is discharged from the army. Outside, the anarchy of the interregnum reigns: new newspapers, galleries, and political parties spring up overnight. Squatted buildings are raided at night by suburban skinheads, while traveling salesmen from the West arrive with porn and used cars. In Leipzig, where René begins his university studies, a sense of dissolution and spreading disillusionment fills the air. The only option left is to forge ahead. René moves to Bonn. Instead of studying, he works to pay rent and writes at night. In an artists' commune, he meets Bettina, an aspiring artist from a wealthy family near Freiburg. The two fall in love and move to Berlin together. Here, they experience street riots and the Loveparade, visit gallery openings and luxury bars. Yet, as the world waits for the magical year 2000, René and his friends are still searching for their place in a new system that is supposed to replace the homeland they lost.

In his epic post-reunification novel, André Kubiczek captures life in the wild nineties - an atmospheric, vivid portrait of a turbulent era.

Berlin-based journalist Nele Leibert travels to the mist-shrouded province of Lower Silesia for her grandfather's funeral. But saying goodbye to the family patriarch is only the beginning of her journey. Nele soon realizes that the silence of her revered yet headstrong "Djado" has left deep fractures that reach into the present day. Driven by a dark suspicion, she follows the ghosts of the past all the way to Galicia - the origin of her family's flight and displacement. A powerful exploration of memory, trauma, and the secrets that shape generations.

Sabrina Janesch draws from Polish myths and traditional folklore, masterfully weaving them into the defining themes of our time.

Hawai'i, 1893: Coconut palms still sway in the wind, rainbows stretch across the sky, yet on the horizon, a storm is already brewing. American industrialists overthrow the queen in a coup and prepare the islands' annexation by the United States. In Honolulu, tensions simmer, and the rifts extend even into the influential German community of the archipelago, for a land is being stolen – and it resists.

At the center of these events are three extraordinary women: the wise and witty Queen Lili'uokalani, her German advisor Gertrude Wolf, and the courageous journalist Emma Nāwahī. They are united not only by their love for Hawai'i and their vision for its future, but above all by a deep friendship tested to the breaking point as their world faces impending collapse. As the decisive battle approaches, each must make her own choice: fight or submit, love or hate, stand firm or surrender.

With passion, Sabrina Janesch portrays how people rise above themselves – or are led astray – during fateful times. A gripping, vividly imagined novel about the price of freedom and self-determination.

Lars Becker, born in Hanover in 1954, is an acclaimed film director and screenwriter. In his "first life," he worked as a bartender in Hamburg's infamous St. Pauli district. He went on to study film in Hamburg and New York before directing his first features. Becker shot to fame with the cult movie Kanak Attack (based on the novel by Feridun Zaimoglu, with whom he co-wrote the screenplay). This was followed by the hit crime series Nachtschicht, centering on Detective Erichsen (played by Armin Rohde), as well as highly praised films like Der gute Bulle, Wahrheit oder Lüge, and Der Millionen Raub, all of which drew enthusiastic audiences and critical acclaim. Becker has received numerous accolades, including the German Television Crime Award, the French Television Award, and the German Television Award for Best Director. He lives in Berlin.

2035. Deep beneath the earth lies Terrapolis. A world without sunlight, a world without a future. A world where the dead are condemned to live on. For former union leader and miner Dante Palazzo and the ruthless military policeman Majid Ramzy, only one thing matters: escaping to the surface. Equipped with a serum that protects them from suffocating above ground, the two emerge in Berlin. While Palazzo desperately searches for his family, Ramzy leaves a bloody trail across the city.

But they are not the only ones who made it to the surface. The regime dispatches a hit squad led by Luka Firmينو - a man who was once Ramzy's victim. Soon, police officer Lorraine Diallo and nurse Mona Ramzy are caught in the crossfire, realizing that their own pasts are fatally intertwined with the dead of the underworld. A race against time and the fading effects of the serum begins - a breathtakingly fast-paced story of unbelievable reunions, heartbreaking moments, humor, merciless hatred, and eternal love.

"A master of his own distinct form of neo-noir, Lars Becker has achieved true cult status." Frankfurter Allgemeine Zeitung

Sonja Sophie Kreis, born in 1963 near Lake Constance, is a visual artist and lecturer in art and art history. Her work and artistic residencies have taken her across the globe, including stays in San Francisco, Venice, Skagaströnd (Iceland), and Ilulissat (Greenland). She has published various short stories and essays. Das grosse Eis, which draws from her own autobiographical experiences, is her debut novel. Sonja Sophie Kreis lives in Zurich.

A woman, her long-lost brother, and the wounds of the past.

Anna's brother lives a reclusive life in Greenland. Since childhood, the older Alex has been fascinated only by ice and solitude. Following the death of their parents, Anna decides to bring him a painting - the only artwork from the family home on the vineyard that Alex ever truly loved. As Anna searches for him in the Arctic, amidst its thousand shades of white, the buried secrets of their family begin to unravel. They were an ordinary German-Swiss family, living by a Lake in Southern Germany as if detached from the currents of history - and yet, wars and global upheavals violently intruded upon their lives.

There is the story of their friend, the painter Otto Marquard, who helped the persecuted escape before being arrested himself. There is the grandfather, Josef, the "miracle doctor" who took his ice bathing to extremes. And, not least, the love marriage between Anna's German mother and the handsome Swiss Paul - which quietly dissolved into a profound drama of estrangement.

As Anna reflects on it all - the beautiful and the painful moments, the wounds and the scars - she also discovers the healing power of beauty and intimacy that were always there, despite everything. In doing so, she begins to piece together her fractured family portrait.

"With powerful imagery and linguistic precision, the author weaves together the overwhelming impressions of Greenland with the post-war years along the Swiss-German border to create a sweeping family novel."

THAT'S JUST THE WAY IT IS

- This powerful debut novel explores the devastating reality of femicide through a literary lens.
- A clear, urgent story of two women and a society that enables, covers up, and tolerates violence against women because that's just the way it is.

Jessica Ramczik, born in 1987 in Schönheide, grew up in the Ore Mountains and works as a freelance journalist and editor for the public broadcasters MDR Sputnik and MDR Kultur. After studying law in Dresden and Leipzig, she completed internships at the satirical magazine Titanic and the feminist publication Missy Magazine. Her writing focuses primarily on East Germany, social movements, and feminism. Weil das so ist marks her stunning debut as a novelist.

Two women. Two relationships. Two attempts to kill them. One succeeds, one does not. Whether a woman survives is often pure chance.

Steffi is 46 and lives in the Ore Mountains. She stands out, even though she never wanted to - tall, broad-shouldered, with strong hands. She enjoys her job at the local driver's licensing office, but her home life is a living hell. Many people know that her husband drinks, yells, and hits her - yet they choose to stay silent. For Steffi, leaving him would not just be a personal decision, but a total social rupture. It means facing shame, mistrust, and ostracization. And Steffi knows it.

Lena, 32, lives in Leipzig, leads a team at a social start-up, speaks publicly about equality, and gives lectures on care work and structural violence. Yet, she fails to notice how she is slipping into the exact same trap. For a long time, Lena convinces herself that it is love. That intimacy is allowed to be difficult. She stays. Not out of ignorance, but out of hope. Because she believes that you don't just give up when things get tough.

Stefan Roloff, born in West Berlin in 1953, is a painter and filmmaker who lives and works in New York and Berlin. Widely regarded as a pioneer of digital photographic and video art, his works are exhibited and collected internationally; his creative collaborations include projects with Peter Gabriel. Roloff has repeatedly engaged with German history, dedicating major projects to victims of the Stasi and the Rote Kapelle, an anti-Nazi resistance group to which his father, the musician Helmut Roloff, belonged. In Durchbrenner, his debut novel, Roloff draws closely from reality to deliver an autofictional account of his youth and the spirit of rebellion in 1960s Germany.

Stefan Roloff's Durchbrenner is a timeless coming of age story. It is a gripping, wild, funny ride of what it was like to grow up during turbulent times, a not-so-distant echo of our current moment. It's about how we make sense of a head-spinning world and find our footing within it. Roloff masterfully re-embodies the thoughts and emotions of his boyhood self as he roller coasters into manhood.

Growing up in Cold War West Berlin Max, a free spirit, experiences suffocating restrictions. Deep silence rules society in the aftermath of Hitler's reign. Max is forced to play piano while an unfettered psychedelic culture rages among young people. It is the late 1960s, and Max decides to break out. He escapes from his walled-in hometown and travels through the streets of Europe. Months later, through a ruse, his mother lures him to Tenerife, a remote island in Spain ruled by the dictator, General Franco. Max finds himself without a passport and no money in the home of a doctor intent on re-educating him. He encounters the dangers of the island's military dictatorship as he dives into its underground on a quest to escape his imprisonment for good.

Why are we young for such a fleeting moment, yet old for what feels like eternity?

This novel unfolds from the perspective of a child raised by her grandmother, while simultaneously speaking with the voice of a middle-aged woman caring for a centenarian. The old woman bore her daughters during the Nazi regime; now, her granddaughter is herself the mother of an adult daughter.

Throughout the narrative, viewpoints on family life and caregiving shift, complement, and contradict one another. Roles are reversed: at times, the grandmother stands before us as an imposing figure of authority. At others, as an elderly lady young at heart. And finally, as a woman of biblical age. In doing so, this book of memories spanning decades and generations becomes a profound self-examination: This is how it was. But was it truly that way?

Springtime in Heidelberg! Bertram and Isolde, an aging couple from Oldenburg, are looking to treat themselves to a thoroughly delightful short getaway in the romantic Electoral Palatinate. Perhaps the trip will even clear the psychological smog hovering over their marriage. The boutique hotel is pricey but surprisingly subpar for the money; to make up for it, however, the two quickly discover a new favorite Italian restaurant. Full of charm and flair, the eatery is located on an old river boat anchored in the Neckar.

Yet, as their marriage visibly falls apart over the course of the week, their nightly visits to the restaurant ship turn into an escalating disappointment, a punishment, and ultimately, sheer torture. A demonic force breaks into their mundane everyday life with devastating power, leading to an absolute catastrophe - all while the vintage schlager hit Memories of Heidelberg plays on an endless, maddening loop.

“Strunk once again proves to be a master of tragedy when it comes to sex and love. ... A ghost story? Perhaps, but maybe Heinz Strunk simply writes the most realistic love stories in German literature.”

AND STILL, IT WILL BE SUMMER AGAIN - On Grief and Hope

- A sharp, tender, and deeply moving book about navigating a father's death, and finding the unexpected hope hidden within small, everyday memories.
- A striking story about the silence of sudden loss, the process of finding one's voice again, and the absolute certainty that life will move forward.

September 2026 · 176 pages

Sebastian Becker was born in Braunschweig and has been writing and publishing texts online since the age of fifteen. Since 2012, he has been sharing his poetic observations of everyday life on Instagram under the pseudonym Tschief. His iconic handwriting has become his signature trademark, and today, more than 100,000 people follow his work. Sebastian Becker is 33 years old and lives in Hanover.

When Sebastian Becker is twenty-eight years old, his father dies. This loss is the big bang of his life. Afterward: silence. Acoustic trauma.

Ever since, many things have felt heavy, including talking about it. Sebastian searches for words and finds: memories. It is these memories, of both bright and dark days, that bring back his voice. And as Sebastian begins to share them - speaking of buckets filled with sunflowers, of colorful socks, of green bananas, of paywalls blocking obituaries, of loving and longing - his words are clear and radiant. They all say the exact same thing: Hi Dad, I miss you.

Und es wird trotzdem wieder Sommer werden tells a story of saying goodbye. Of time standing still in moments of deepest shock. Of time that can never be recovered. Of empathy. Of being soft. Of the incomprehensible joy of being alive. Of waiting for the summer - and of the absolute certainty that this summer will come.

"This book is like sun in the winter, surprising and consoling. I wept and laughed, and when it was over, I wanted to tell all the people I hold dear that I love them. Most of all those I rarely ever tell."

Romy Fölck was born in Meißen in 1974. She studied law and worked in business for many years. In her mid-30s, she decided to give her dream of being a writer a chance. She quit her job and flat in Leipzig, and moved north. Here she lives together with her husband in a house surrounded by apple trees close to the river Elbe. Her first novel, Die Rückkehr der Kraniche, immediately entered the bestseller list.

A summer house by the lake, the gentle power of the water, and the healing tranquility of the forest.

Following the sudden collapse of her nearly twenty-year marriage, Judith leaves Hamburg on a whim and heads to Sweden - back to the island near Stockholm that was the sanctuary of her childhood. She hopes to find peace in a small, red guest house. Yet, the familiar surroundings stir up more than just sweet nostalgia; they awaken painful memories of her former best friend.

For Evi, too, has returned to the island. Now a renowned artist, Evi is secretly fighting a numbness in her hands, a terrifying condition that threatens her very existence. When Judith and Evi cross paths once more, old wounds are instantly ripped open.

But whenever the rain lashes against the water, Marga can be found swimming her laps. The elderly lady braves the elements day in and day out, driven by a devastating tragedy from her past that taught her giving up is never an option. Marga's unwavering resilience becomes a beacon for both younger women, showing them that it is always worth fighting for your dreams - no matter how stormy the weather gets.

Friends forever. But what happens when life gets in the way?

During their university days, Merle, Katharina, and Henri spent their afternoons in the park and crashed on Henri's sofa bed after partying all night. They were free, and the future was a blurry, promising horizon. It was one of those friendships that felt natural, easy, and light - the kind you never have to work for.

But now, the three of them are grown. Their meetings have become rare, the demands of life much heavier. While Henri pursues her dream of owning a cinema and bounces from one party to the next, Merle only knows long nights because her baby refuses to sleep. And though Katharina loves her job at the bookstore, she is no longer sure of her feelings for her partner after a ten-year relationship.

All of a sudden, the things pulling them apart seem vastly bigger than the common ground that once bound them together. As each woman fights her own battles against reality, the longing for their old closeness and intimacy deepens. But how do you hold onto a friendship whose pieces are drifting apart like ice floes?

THE OKTOBERFEST CHRONICLES

- A grippingly hilarious odyssey into the Bavarian paradise of excess.
- Rights to Dicht were sold to Sweden (it-lit).
- 170,000 copies sold of the author's previous four titles altogether.

August 2026 · 96 pages

Stefanie Sargnagel, born in 1986, studied painting at the Academy of Fine Arts in Vienna but spent more time at her day job in a call centre. She has been a freelance author since 2016 – and has since spent more time with her tax advisor. She received the BKS Bank Audience Prize during the competition for the Ingeborg Bachmann Prize 2016. Her books, Statusmeldungen, Dicht, Iowa and Opernball were bestsellers, with Statusmeldungen being adapted into a movie.

Following her acclaimed book on the Vienna Opera Ball, bestselling author Stefanie Sargnagel returns with another adventurous travelogue, this time tackling the Munich Oktoberfest. Defying all warnings and laced tightly into a traditional Dirndl, she ventures into a place that many consider an absolute nightmare, and others: pure heaven.

Her journey sparks profound reflections on the endearing and the less flattering cultural ties between Austria and Bavaria. More than anything, however, it is a relentless, deep dive into an intoxicating frenzy that could only ever exist in Bavaria. This isn't mere drinking; it is a wild, primal spectacle of binging, boozing, and debauchery, of staggering, vomiting, and losing consciousness - all fueled by the euphoric conviction that this is exactly how things are supposed to be.

Stefanie Sargnagel observes, participates, and leaves the reader wide-eyed, constantly wondering: What did she actually experience, and what did she make up? In this place, anything seems possible.

Anne Stern is a doctorate Germanist and historian who lives in Berlin. Her series about the Berlin midwife Fräulein Gold has been a great success, with each book becoming a Spiegel bestseller.

Berlin, 1933: Hulda works as a dedicated midwife in her local neighborhood of Schöneberg. Yet, the daily lives of the people around her are becoming increasingly stifled by the rapid radicalization of society and rising antisemitism.

Looking for a brief escape, Hulda takes her daughter to a traveling funfair near the Königskolonnaden. There, among candy canes, raffle tickets, a massive Ferris wheel, and the brightly painted backdrops of the roller coaster, a world of joy awaits.

But beneath the surface, dark abysses open up. Between the shooting galleries and merry-go-rounds, Hulda crosses paths with a terrified woman from a family of showfolk. Before long, she finds herself tracking a sinister secret where life and death hang in the balance. Meanwhile, Inspector Irma Siegel is fighting against the clock in a high-stakes kidnapping case. By the time she and Hulda realize how their paths intertwine, it is almost too late - and Hulda is forced to learn which of her friends she can still truly trust.

After various positions in journalism and copywriting, she made her passion her job. Today she lives and writes from her home in northern Hesse. She is fascinated by historical places, old photographs and secrets – and has a great weakness for sugar and cinnamon.

Finkenwerder, 1892: Since the tragic death of her mother, young Kea Loop finds solace only in her mother's old apple orchard. It is there that she dreams of breeding the perfect apple. But when a promising seedling finally sprouts, she faces a major obstacle: it is growing just across the provincial border that divides their island of Finkenwerder into Hamburg and Prussia - and worse, it lies on the land of the Rentfelds, her family's bitter rivals.

When Kea decides to sneak across anyway, she is caught red-handed by Kristen, the Rentfelds' farmhand. What should have been the sudden end to her apple project marks the beginning of a grand, forbidden love story. Meanwhile, her father has plans of his own to settle the ancient blood feud, betrothing Kea to Tamme Rentfeld. At the very same time, a devastating cholera epidemic breaks out in Hamburg, and the border between Hamburg and Prussia is strictly sealed. But Kea cannot forget Kristen. To see him again, she must risk everything, cross dangerous social and political divides, and tear her old world to pieces.

THE CHRISTMAS FERRY

- Christmas at sea: The ultimate festive page-turner by Spiegel bestselling author Janne MommSEN.
- Pure feel-good fiction packed with human warmth, comfort, and coastal charm.

September 2026 · 192 pages

Janne MommSEN was born on the Baltic Sea coast. Before becoming a writer he was a nurse, a shipyard worker and a pianist on a cruise ship. Now he mostly writes novels, scripts and plays. He lived in northern Frisia and often returns to take in the invigorating coastal atmosphere.

Just in the nick of time, a handful of lucky passengers manage to catch the last Christmas Eve ferry to the North Sea island of Föhr, all buzzing with anticipation for the holidays. But halfway through the journey, disaster strikes: the ferry runs aground, trapped fast in the thick mudflats. Forced together by fate, the wildly different passengers must find a way to get along and make the best of it.

Among those stranded on board are Santa Claus Thomsen, eagerly awaited by the island's children, and Pastor Harms, who is supposed to deliver the big sermon at the historic island cathedral. There are two lonely souls from Hamburg, who only met in a supermarket just hours before boarding. And then there is Beeke, a local who has just returned from Martinique, longing for a cozy, stormy island Christmas - though she is being watched closely by a senior prosecutor who is investigating her for a very good reason. Meanwhile, out in the island marshlands, local police officer Ralf scrambles to find a bizarre substitute for the cathedral sermon. But how can the grand Christmas Eve party happen without the festive food locked away on the ferry? Ultimately, out on the freezing sea, one of the most unusual and beautiful Christmas Eves of all time unfolds.

PAPER WHISPERS

- A charming novel exploring the enduring magic of a handwritten letter in a modern world dominated by WhatsApp and Instagram.
- An inspiring and deeply comforting story about the transformative power of self-discovery, human connection, and community.

December 2026 · 368 pages

Susanne Bohne, a native of Germany's vibrant Ruhr region, studied German Language and Literature and worked as a designer before she was inspired by her daughter to begin writing and illustrating children's books. She firmly believes that humor is the ultimate survival strategy and that life's small things are often much bigger than they appear. This comforting philosophy shines through in her previous novel, Das schräge Haus.

“Never underestimate the power of a good letter.” That is what Marie’s mother used to say. Perhaps that is precisely why Marie became a postal worker, still writing letters to her mother and slipping them into an abandoned mailbox. But now, in her mid-forties, Marie has lost her job, and she deeply misses her daily interactions with the neighborhood.

Seizing the first opportunity that comes her way, she takes a temporary job at Café Rosmarin. Before long, she begins serving encouraging, hand-written notes alongside cappuccino to the guests she recognizes from her old postal route. But who is there to encourage Marie? Then, the unexpected happens: the old mailbox is put back into service, and Marie’s private letters land in the hands of a novelist suffering from severe writer's block. Her words touch something deep inside him - and soon, Marie receives a letter from a stranger who may not have all the answers, but who shares her innermost thoughts. For a while, Marie feels truly happy again, perhaps even a little in love. But then she hears about a new upcoming novel, and its plot feels devastatingly familiar ...

THE GLOW OF SMALL MOMENTS

- Mindfulness, Italian style: An inspiring novel about life, Italy, and the transformative power of self-love.
- Written by professional mindset coach and mentor Sabine Steck, drawing on her experience living and working in Italy.

July 2026 · 288 pages

Sabine Steck, born in Germany, took a different path as an entrepreneur before deciding to pursue her passion for writing full-time. She now lives in Northern Italy, where she runs a writing retreat and incorporates her love for Italian cuisine into her crime novels featuring Emma Ferrari, which sometimes also include settings in Bavaria.

An old, enchanted hotel nestled in the Venetian hills, featuring a breathtaking green labyrinth in its garden - the moment Nina first sees the Villa Primaluna, she is left utterly speechless. She was supposed to be somewhere else right now, celebrating her fiftieth birthday on a trip with her husband. Instead, she finds herself alone in Italy, her lifelong destination of longing, wishing for nothing more than some time to herself.

There, Nina meets Consilia, a wise older woman who has run the hotel for decades and whose life has been entirely different from her own. Though Nina initially hesitates to fully open up, she soon senses that this journey holds far more for her than mere relaxation and fine Italian food. Perhaps here, in this extraordinary place, she can finally find a way out of the emptiness that has weighed on her for so long. Perhaps hidden within the labyrinth lies the answer to the one question she has avoided for years. And perhaps she will finally find what she has been searching for all along: herself.

It feels like coming home. But she is not alone. Someone is watching, someone is following, someone is there while she sleeps ...

It was supposed to be the safest place on earth. The thatched cottage tucked behind the dunes, where Lotta spent the happiest days of her childhood. She knows exactly where the key is hidden, knows the haunting cry of the crows in the garden. This is where she will hide. Here, she will never be found.

But the seaside village has changed. Once vibrant and teeming with life, it now feels desolate, almost ghost-like. And inside the house, something has shifted. A chilling sensation begins to take hold: Lotta is not alone. Someone is watching. Someone follows her through the dunes. Someone is with her while she sleeps.

As Lotta begins to question her own sanity, the house she thought she knew so well starts to reveal its shadows. Why are the locals so hostile? As she digs deeper, a dark history emerges - a truth long buried within the pages of a forgotten diary.

Then, Lotta learns of the young woman who was there before her. The woman who lived in this very house. The woman who died here.

He found time to write his books during quiet moments – whether late at night beside the baby's crib, on train rides, or by the North Sea, a place he holds dear. Joachim Kuck resides with his family in the Bergisches Land region.

Norderney is frozen in shock: 16-year-old high school student Jenny Wistgraaf has been found strangled to death, her body meticulously and eerily staged. The gruesome murder leads Tilla Flock and Father Hark Herforth straight into the inner circle of former child actress Marla von Maertens. As the investigative duo soon discovers, Jenny was an amateur journalist who had been digging into the long-buried, eccentric life story of the reclusive island celebrity.

They suspect the young girl was on the verge of exposing a horrifying history of abuse inflicted upon Marla by a mysterious cult family decades ago. Did Jenny find proof that this cult is still operating in the isolated marshlands of the mainland? And did her discovery awaken the deadly ghosts of the past? This dark conspiracy pushes Tilla straight to the brink of the grave and lands Hark within an inch of a prison cell. Though every new revelation cuts them to the quick, they are determined to fight with everything they have to bring the twisted truth to light.

Two estranged sisters on opposite sides of the law: Forced to join forces to solve a murder - and save their brother.

They are sisters. They haven't spoken in years. And they could virtually not be more opposite. There is the impulsive Ela, a tough neighborhood bouncer with occasional ties to the criminal underworld, and Nicole, a rule-bound, meticulous police officer who has always stayed strictly on the right side of the law.

Ela, now in her mid-forties, is the sole caregiver for their brother, Hendrix, who suffers from early-onset Alzheimer's. One morning after her night shift, a deeply disoriented Hendrix starts rambling about "blood, so much blood" that he claims to have seen in the Harburg harbor during one of his nightly wanderings. Shortly after, a corpse is pulled from the freezing, dark waters of the Elbe River. A sickening suspicion takes root in Ela: Is Hendrix somehow involved?

A dark past tore these sisters apart. Now, they are forced to work together - for the sake of the brother they both love. But in the end, will they prove Hendrix's innocence, or unearth his guilt? Is he in mortal danger - or is he a murderer?

Eva Pramschüfer

WHITE SUMMER

- 40,000 copies sold!
- A modern relationship novel about love in one's twenties.
- English sample translation and English synopsis available.

Alma and Théo truly love each other. Their first meeting felt like the beginning of something extraordinary, and the time that followed felt like a promise. And yet, now they find themselves caught between two truths: they love each other, and still their relationship lies in ruins. How can you tell if you can be happy together – or if you would be happier apart? In search of answers, they spend one more summer in Alma's parents' house in France, vowing not to leave until they have certainty: hold on, or let go. Eva Pramschüfer tells, with dedication and stylistic finesse, a story of first love, of art, and of the things that both divide and connect us as human beings.

"Eva Pramschüfer gently recounts this emotionally draining summer, creating an atmosphere that resonates perfectly." Die Zeit

Szczepan Twardoch

LONGING

- A "different" Twardoch: a novel full of lightness and humor, warmth and great sympathy for the hero.
- Die Nulllinie became #2 of the Spiegel Book Prize 2025! Rights were sold to 7 countries.
- English sample translation available.

Erwin Piontek, a retired miner, pursues his lifelong dream of sailing around the world on a local reservoir. But mid-sail, he is transformed, sparking an adventurous odyssey across eras and continents. Suddenly, he is a soldier fighting colonialism in German South West Africa. Next, he is in Berlin, attempting to assassinate a cruel officer in the name of justice. Escaping into the water, he goes under - and resurfaces in 1979 as a Polish president wrestling for power in a right-wing Europe.

Szczepan Twardoch delivers a literary tour de force that chronicles the 20th and 21st centuries through one man in three distinct lives. It asks: How did we become who we are? Why are we torn between the longing for the "Other" and the desire for home? An epic adventure and a celebration of the freedom to reinvent oneself.

Caroline Wahl

THE ASSISTANT

- 320,000 copies sold!
- 1,1 MIO copies of her previous two novels sold, with rights sold to 13 countries.
- English sample translation available.

Charlotte gave up her dream of music for a "decent job" at a publishing house in beautiful Munich. Working right at the center of power, she quickly becomes essential to her demanding boss, who is known for burning through assistants. To maintain his trust, Charlotte must endure extreme toxicity, risk her health, and potentially lose her love for Bo. With a wonderfully laconic tone, humor, and psychological sophistication, Caroline Wahl tells the story of a young woman who refuses to be made a victim when her job becomes hell. This is a novel about resilience and survival.

Miriam Georg

STORMLAND (Vol. I)

- A fateful love story set at the dawn of North German sea rescue.
- 1,4 MIO copies sold of her books by Rowohlt altogether!
- English sample translation available.

Cora is the daughter of a prominent Hamburg shipping family - but she must flee her old life and finds herself, from one day to the next, a governess in the seaside resort of Norderney.

During her very first week, she and her pupil Emmi are caught in a sea emergency during an excursion. The North Sea is unpredictable, and the ebb tide pulls their rowboat far out onto the open ocean!

Day laborer Onnen simply cannot comprehend the ignorance of these resort guests ... They have no respect for the sea and its tides! When young Emmi and her governess Cora require a perilous rescue operation, he has little desire to guide the two around the island. Needing money desperately, however, he takes the job anyway.

With each passing day, Cora and Onnen grow closer. But Onnen is guarded by a past on his home island of Borkum that he keeps strictly locked away. And Cora has people back in Hamburg who are desperately trying to bring her back. That must never happen. No one can ever know who Cora really is - or what she has done ...

THE DEATH WOMAN: The Return (Vol. IV)

- Blum is back - a gripping new thriller about a cult figure, full of force and emotion.
- 530,000 copies sold of Totenfrau (Vol. I-III). With rights sold to 16 countries and an adaptation into a Netflix series!
- 1 MIO copies sold of his thrillers altogether!

The Death Woman returns – the sequel of the international success story.

Aichner at his best - fast-paced suspense, clean-cut and intense.

Ten years have passed since Blum last murdered. She lives quietly and reclusively on a yacht in Croatia with her partner, Reza, offering charter trips to the surrounding islands to earn money. Blum no longer believes she will be discovered - until an unexpected death on board forces her to cross her boundaries once again. Not only her life and Reza's are at stake, but also the lives of her children.

"An inventive, forceful, engrossing revenge thriller!" (The Times about Die Totenfrau, Vol. I)

A TASTE OF CORNWALL: A Recipe for Heartbeats (Vol. III)

- In the furious finale of the Cornwall series, the heat is on - and not just in the kitchen.
- 50,000 copies sold of Vol. I-III altogether with rights sold to the Netherlands (Luitingh Sijthoff).

To boost Port Haven's appeal, the town comes up with a brilliant PR idea: four teams will face off in the Great Dinner Cook-Off – a high-profile cooking competition broadcast to the nation. Among the contestants are popular food blogger Lucia Rossi and celebrity footballer Liam Tartt. Neither of them has the slightest interest in the PR stunt – or in each other.

But with Lucia's career at stake – and Liam left with no real choice – both are forced to take part in the show. Unsurprisingly, they clash constantly in the kitchen – something the press is quick to spin as sizzling chemistry.

As they spend more and more time cooking side by side, Lucia and Liam slowly begin to lower their guard – and soon, they're left wondering: are the sparks flying between them really just for the cameras?
